1 Now available in Mossy Oak New Break-Up, SPEEDFEED Synthetic Shotgun Stocks provide the serious hunter with the added edge of firearm concealment, while upgrading the quality of the stock and fore-end. These stocks and fore-ends are created with 30-percent glass-filled polymer and are thicker for maximum durability in the field. The pieces are coated with a tough camouflage film that is guaranteed not to chip or crack. The new pattern is available on the company's patented stocks, which feature additional shelf space inside the stock.

2 Royal Purple's synthetic gun oil works well in a variety of temperatures and will not thicken in cold weather. Its performance advantages come from Synerlec, the company's proprietary chemical technology that strengthens the oil for unmatched performance and protection.

3 Coleman's Exponent Dual Fuel Apollo is the ideal way to get a warm meal, even in the most remote hunting location. The fully adjustable flame is capable of producing 9,000 BTUs, yet only weighs 15.9 ounces (without the fuel bottle). It operates on either Coleman Liquid Fuel or unleaded gasoline and the stainless steel legs can be folded for compact storage.

4 The EVO S 557, from Wenger, is perfect for your next hunt. Unlike most other Swiss Army knives, its main blade locks securely for touch-up work on a hide or those occasions when you forget your hunting knife. Its 13 implements include a 2 1/2-inch locking blade, adjustable pliers, scissors, locking screwdriver, cap lifter, wire stripper, wrench, Phillips head screwdriver, can opener, awl, nail file, corkscrew, toothpick and tweezers. At only 3 1/4 inches in length, weighing 4 1/2 ounces. It's a great backup for today's hunters.

5 The "Longhunter Muzzleloading Big Game Record Book", fourth edition, which was published by the National Muzzle Loading Rifle Association in 2004, is a great resource for traditional hunters. The hard-cover volume covers 32 game animals, photos of some of the largest taken by muzzleloading hunters and thousands of entries with complete details on where and when the animals were taken. To enter your big-game animal for the next edition, you don't even have to be an NMLRA member.

6 This classic Trails End Model 94 from Winchester, offered only by the NRA Foundation in a special limited-edition run of 1,050 units, is chambered in .44 Rem. Mag., has a 20-inch barrel and includes a top tang safety and custom embellishments by Baron Technology. The receiver, bands and barrel have an overall nickel finish, with 24-karat gold plating on a border scroll. In addition, Baron added a monogram logo, elk scene and gold sequential custom serialization. On the left side Baron has 24-karat gold plating on a border scroll-engraved NRA monogram logo and a deer scene.
